Collaboration:
Having students work in pairs supports collaboration. Students must make decisions together and problem solve. Coding a product can support interdependent elements.

Knowledge Construction:
Learning to code is building new knowledge as students learn a new language. It involves critical thinking skills and logic.

Real World Problem Solving & Innovation:
Students can design and code programs that solve problems and meet a real world purpose/need.